Thomas R. Insel, MD, Director

Founding Date: 1946. Staff Size: 716. Publications new this year: Two revised booklets: Autism Spectrum Disorders (Pervasive Developmental Disorders) and Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, including details on symptoms, causes and treatments, with information on getting help and coping. NIMH pamphlets and printable materials are available on the diagnosis and treatment of mental disorders, such as anxiety disorders (including obsessive-compulsive disorder, panic disorder, social phobia, and post-traumatic stress disorder), depression, bipolar disorder, ADHD, autism, eating disorders, schizophrenia, child and adolescent mental health, the Real Men Real Depression campaign, NIMH-sponsored clinical trials, workshops, meetings, complete text of program announcements and requests for applications, and other items of interest, at www.nimh.nih.gov. Publications are free and can be ordered on line. To receive more information on NIMH activities, subscribe to NIMH-E-NEWS on the NIMH home page or contact the NIMH Information Center toll free at 866/615-6464. Staff Participating in MHLG: Gemma Weiblinger, Special Assistant to the Director and Director, Office of Constituency Relations and Public Liaison.

Organizational Purpose: To reduce the burden of mental illness and behavioral disorders through research on mind, brain, and behavior. Although much progress has been made in treating mental illness and in achieving effective preventive interventions, efforts to achieve even further improvements will continue. All the while, NIMH maintains a clear focus on its ultimate goal: to pursue an understanding that will enable us to intervene to prevent mental illness, or to develop rational treatments that will actually cure them once they occur. Implicit in the NIMH mission is the challenge of ensuring that new information finds its way into the hands of the end users of research. These include individuals with mental disorders, health care providers, mental health service delivery systems, and policymakers at all levels of governance. Description: To understand the causes and improve the treatment and prevention of mental illness, NIMH research brings a multidisciplinary approach to studying the human brain, integrating findings from the neurosciences, basic behavioral sciences, clinical research, epidemiology, prevention research, and mental health services research to study the causes and treatments for mental disorders such as schizophrenia, mood disorders, anxiety disorders, eating disorders, Alzheimer's disease, and childhood mental illnesses. To reduce possible health disparities, NIMH research also addresses the mental health needs of racial and ethnic minority populations, women, and residents of rural and frontier areas. Priority Issues for 2005: Building on the Decade of the Brain, we are poised for a Decade of Translation, with new discoveries from genomics, neuroscience, and behavioral science leading to new, more effective treatments, and ultimately to the possibility of preventing and curing mental illness. One important effort has been to sharpen the focus and impact of the entire portfolio to better serve the mission of the institute. With input from various stakeholders, NIMH has revised priorities and three key factors are being used to evaluate new applications: relevance to the mission, traction for making rapid progress, and innovation. To facilitate translation and integration across the Institute, NIMH extramural research programs were reorganized from three to five divisions. NIMH's priority-setting, new funding strategies and reorganization are designed to optimize the translation of the best science to implementation in the service of those with mental illness, thus having the greatest impact on public health. Other priorities include: Develop biologically-based markers of disease that could transform diagnosis, risk assessment, and treatment for disabling mental disorders, as well as provide information on timing of disease onset, severity or progress. Develop new treatments that will target the cognitive, social, and affective deficits seen in schizophrenia and schizophrenia spectrum disorders in childhood. Develop and test new treatments for infants and children with autism spectrum disorders. Develop tools to understand the impact of hormonal changes during life transitions on mood and cognitive function. Reduce rates of adolescent depression and suicide. Increase effective dissemination and implementation of treatment and services. In addition, NIMH is participating in the NIH Neuroscience Blueprint, a framework to enhance cooperation among 15 NIH Institutes and Centers that support research on the nervous system. By pooling resources and expertise, the Blueprint can take advantage of economies of scale, confront challenges too large for any single Institute, and develop research tools and infrastructure that will serve the entire neuroscience community. For FY 2005, Blueprint participants are developing initiatives focused on tools, resources, and training that can have a quick and substantial impact because each builds on existing programs, including an inventory of neuroscience tools funded by the NIH and other government agencies, enhancement of training in the neurobiology of disease for basic neuroscientists, and expansion of ongoing gene expression database efforts.
