Re: Request that Regulations Providing Flexibility for Telehealth in Medicaid, Medicare, CHIP, and Federally Subsidized and Funded Health Programs be Extended After the COVID-19 Emergency, Allowing for- a Transition Period for Data Collection and Adequate Time to Determine which Flexibilities to Make Permanent

Dear Administrator Verma:

The Mental Health Liaison Group (MHLG), a coalition of national organizations representing consumers, families, mental health and addiction providers, advocates and other stakeholders committed to strengthening access to high-quality mental and behavioral health care, writes to request that the emergency regulations providing flexibility for telehealth in Medicaid, Medicare, CHIP, and other federally funded and subsidized health programs be extended for a reasonable transition period following the emergency period to collect appropriate data to provide an adequate amount of time to determine which flexibilities should be continued permanently.

First and foremost, MHLG's members and their allies and providers in the mental illness and substance use disorder prevention and treatment fields want to express our gratitude for your quick and effective actions in reducing previous telehealth restrictions in federally funded and subsidized health programs to meet access and treatment needs in the ongoing COVID-19 pandemic. We especially appreciate your broadening the permitted use of audio-only phone telehealth.

Anecdotal evidence from the field reported by providers and in the press¹ indicates these flexibilities have facilitated access to and by behavioral health providers across all federally funded and subsidized programs under conditions that might otherwise have seen a much greater reduction in access. Despite the social distancing measures that have needed to be put in place during the pandemic, behavioral health providers have been able to maintain contact, communications, and therapeutic activities with their patients via landlines, smartphones, and computer-based applications. Many patients in rural and frontier remote areas, but also in hard-hit urban areas, have been able to maintain their therapeutic relationships with their providers.

While none of us know when the current emergency will end, we urge CMS to establish a one-year transition period, beginning once the emergency declaration is terminated, to retain the current telehealth flexibilities, including those relating to audio-only phone telehealth, and to plan for how all or some might be extended permanently. It is clear that the trauma resulting from the social distancing measures taken to shorten the duration of the pandemic, and the pandemic itself, will leave the U.S. population in need of continued and/or enhanced behavioral health services and that need will not end when the pandemic emergency is declared over.

During the transition period that we propose would follow the emergency period, telehealth flexibilities would be retained. CMS and states would collect, during and after the declared pandemic emergency, data and/or outcomes to assess the use and impact of these telehealth options. Such data collection would help inform CMS' decisions on which flexibilities should be made permanent and responsibly administered. The transition period would also provide time to determine which flexibilities would require statutory changes by Congress to be made permanent and/or allow states to submit to CMS the necessary requests for authority revisions for approval.

Again, thanks so much for the flexibility CMS has shown in implementing telehealth flexibilities during the pandemic. We hope we can partner with the agency in determining which of these flexibilities to make permanent after the emergency has passed.
